

Dear Secretary Haaland,

The Arctic Ocean faces unprecedented threats, including melting sea ice, ocean acidification and increasing vessel traffic. Despite these threats, the Trump administration proposed to weaken the Arctic Drilling Rule, a 2016 regulation designed to protect Arctic waters from the threat of offshore oil and gas drilling.

The Department of the Interior should withdraw the Trump administration's proposed rule change and protect the 2016 Arctic Drilling Rule.

The Arctic Drilling Rule was developed after—and incorporated lessons from—the 2010 Deepwater Horizon disaster in the Gulf of Mexico and Shell's calamity-plagued effort to conduct exploration drilling in the U.S. Arctic in 2012. It created safety and environmental protection standards specifically tailored to the harsh operating conditions of the Arctic Ocean. Among other things, it requires would-be drillers to develop an integrated operations plan and have special spill containment equipment on-site and ready for deployment. It also mandates seasonal drilling restrictions to help ensure sea ice does not adversely affect spill prevention and response.

During former President Trump's term, his administration weakened other offshore drilling safety rules, gutted rules that implement the National Environmental Policy Act, undermined climate policy and attacked scores of other rules designed to safeguard public health and the environment. Restoring those and other environmental rules and policies will take time and strong leadership from the Biden administration.

But the Department of the Interior can act to protect the 2016 Arctic Drilling Rule right now.

The Arctic Drilling Rule was good policy when it was implemented in 2016, and it remains good policy today. The Interior Department should keep in place the Rule's common-sense safety and environmental protection standards. The Department of the Interior should withdraw the Trump administration's proposed changes to the 2016 Arctic Drilling Rule.

Thank you,
