

To The Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement,

6515 people have submitted the following public comment in response to your request for comments (Docket ID: OSM-2016-0006).

Here is the public comment each signatory has submitted:

Taxpayers should not be on the hook for cleaning up coal companies' mess when they go bankrupt. Coal companies with a history of financial trouble must not be allowed to self-bond, plain and simple. We support changing Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act regulations to ensure that companies with a history of financial insolvency, and their subsidiary companies, are not allowed to self-bond coal mining operations.

You can view each public comment submitter and the additional comments they left you below.

Thank you,

Matt Maiorana, Oil Change International

The Carbon Cartel have been wreaking wanton environmental damage for over two centuries -- and have made staggering, indeed obscene, profits. Now they want to declare bankruptcy and walk away, leaving the mitigation -- if even possible -- of their devastation to be paid for by us taxpayers? Like bloody goddamn hell.

If it is a "private corporation" or business, the responsibility to completely cover clean-up costs rests with the business not the American taxpayer. This principle must stand for coal and every other private polluter or disruptor of the health and safety of US citizens. We must not be made to pay for corporate irresponsibility.

CALLED DIRTY COAL FOR A REASON:

For MANY YEARS coal companies have been allowed to only 'promise' they'll pay when their coal mine closes ('self-bonding'), and NEVER actually set aside the amount of money THEY ARE REQUIRED TO SET ASIDE FOR THAT PURPOSE.

Now the world's largest coal mining company, Peabody-- has claimed bankruptcy. And just like usual, Peabody's owners shrug and claim they just don't have the cash to clean up their pollution --their own mess. And their scumbag politician/lawmaker buddies let their corrupt friend's laughingly ... walk away once again...unaccountable.

THIS IS A CRIME AGAINST ALL THE AMERICAN PEOPLE AND OUR NATION.

It seems like every other month you hear of yet another coal company claiming bankruptcy: in January it was Arch Coal; now in April it's Peabody-- the world's largest coal company!

CLOSING THIS LOOPHOLE will immediately stop that from happening again, and also help our communities and the natural ecosystems that exist around the coal mines across our country.

Clean up should be factored in to the cost of doing business. Of course everyone would like to just take the profits and make someone else pay their operating expenses. But in the real world you need to both pay for your operation and then and only then take your profits. This is essentially subsidizing an industry with tax dollars. As I am paying the taxes I say represent me and end this use for my hard earned money. We need to reduce the debt by having the correct party pay the bill NOT the tax payer.

Tell the government to close this dirty loophole.

Act Now

Dear DIANE,

Good news: we're on the verge of winning an important fight against the coal industry! The Department of Interior just announced that they're considering closing a crazy loophole that currently leaves taxpayers on the hook for cleaning up after coal companies that go bankrupt. They've opened an official public comment period to help them make their final decision.

We have until June 20th to get our comments in and show the Department of the Interior there's massive public support for making coal companies clean up their own messes.

The Department of Interior just announced that they're considering closing a crazy loophole that currently leaves taxpayers on the hook for cleaning up after coal companies that go bankrupt. They've opened an official public comment period to help them make their final decision.

For years, coal companies have been allowed just to promise the government they'll be able to pay for the clean-up when a coal mine closes ("self-bonding"), instead of actually setting aside the money required to do so. But, when companies like Peabody go bankrupt, and then don't have the cash to clean up their mess, the law lets these companies shrug their shoulders, shirk their obligation, and walk away.

It seems like every other month another coal company goes bankrupt: in January it was Arch Coal; in April it was Peabody, the world's largest coal company. Closing this loophole is an urgently needed step that will immediately help communities and natural ecosystems around coal mines across the country.

We have less than 2 weeks to flood the government with official, public comments. With enough pressure we can make sure the Interior Department does the right thing.

I had to remove a residential underground oil tank from my property, and place a new tank inside my garage. The soil was tested & inspected by the local Building Inspector. If they had found even 1 drop of oil- I would have had to pay over $20, 000. for soil mitigation. If individual homeowners must pay to clean up an environmental hazard- SURELY coal & oil companies must be REQUIRED to do the same! This is an outrage....corporations pillaging our environment, and like Donald Trump- walking away from all responsibility! Stop this NOW!

Zep 3:6-13 [LB] I have cut off many nations, laying them waste to their farthest borders; I have left their streets in silent ruin and their cities deserted I thought, Surely they will listen to me now—surely they will heed my warnings, so that I'll not need to strike again. But no; however much I punish them, they continue all their evil ways from dawn to dusk and dusk to dawn." But the Lord says, be patient; the time is coming soon when I will stand up and accuse these evil nations. At that time My scattered people will come with their offerings, asking me to be their God again. And then you will no longer need to be ashamed of yourselves, for you will no longer be rebels against me. I will remove all your proud and arrogant people from among you; there will be no pride or haughtiness on my holy mountain. Those who are left will be the poor and the humble, and they will trust in the name of the Lord. They will not be sinners, full of lies and deceit. Considering that the coal industry is in decline it would be a prudent decision to protect taxpayers by requiring that coal companies obtain a bond of sufficient size to cover the cleanup of their operations. If this is not done it is highly likely that once again the taxpayer will be footing the bill that should have been covered by corporations. This has happened in the past because of a tolerant regulatory approach to the industry, and it is past the time that the taxpayer should subsidize industry costs to increase the personal profits of the industry executives.

Peabody Energy declared bankruptcy in April. The company has dozens of strip mines and underground coal mines in the West and Midwest that will ultimately need to be rehabbed once the digging stops. Peabody is the fifth U.S. coal company to declare bankruptcy. More will probably follow. Taxpayers need greater protection than the current law provides. Please close the loophole and not allow coal companies in financial trouble to self-bond. Thank you.

We are in the sixth great mass extinction of life on earth due to human caused fossil fuel global warming. In the Permian mass extinction 252 million years ago volcanoes in what is now Russia released carbon pollution into the atmosphere resulting in the death of about 95 percent of life on earth. It took ten million years for life on earth to recover from this destruction. Not only will much of life on earth disappear from our current mass extinction unless we act now but sea level rise will destroy coastal cities around the world which is home to 600 million people. We must act now!

Fossil fuels are rapidly declining while renewable energy is booming. It is irresponsible to still be invested in dirty fossil fuels which are destroying our state and our planet. Instead we should be investing in a clean renewable energy future which doesn't cause drought, destroy our forests or kill marine life. We have a very short time to act before fossil fuel global warming triggers an endless global warming loop of methane release and more warming that we cannot control. Let's do the right thing and divest from dirty global warming fossil fuels now!

Now everybody knows, for certain, that coal and the companies which mined it were not innocent. It is fair to pay some of the 'externalities' they have loaded upon society.

When we speak of individuals or groups that have defaced public property, we demand that they be held accountable for that destruction. If corporations are also "citizens," they should be held equally accountable for their actions. The claim that such actions would bankrupt them and force them out of business (thus harming their employees and communities that depend on them) does not stand as an argument with individuals, so why should it carry weight here? Furthermore, other competitors would be pleased to step in and take over those bankrupt businesses, snatching them up at bargain prices. It has to work in both directions: corporations (especially those that have found ways to avoid paying their fair share of our expenses, especially environmental clean-up and repairing, replacing failing infrastructures, like roads and energy systems) are disrespectful and uncaring about the quality of life lived by Americans) must be forced to "do the right thing" for our nation.

Should a private citizen create environmental degradation they must pay or go to prison, so why do companies still not pay enough for insurance and bonds? I have lobbied in Illinois for strict laws regarding this and hydrofracturing. Requirements are almost nil. Peabody is an old company. They should have to pay for all clean up. The truth will come out soon. The story is still being written. The cost of business must include responsibility for damage done.

The charade of 'self-bonding' is now a patent and obvious fiction in the case of bankrupt coal companies. Every day of mining and despoilation of public lands, pursued by financially insolvent coal companies prolonging their existence into a future that does not want them, is another day of accumulating liabilities for Interior Department cleanup that taxpayers will eventually pay.

Taxpayers have had to bail out all manner of wrongdoers. At some point, we must draw the line, so as not to add to our debt any further and not to increase the sickening feeling that we are being betrayed by our own government. We must also make the moral point that if you have profited from polluting our environment, you must be accountable for cleaning it up. To use bankruptcy to avoid this responsibility is cynical and ugly and indicates a moral and ethical bankruptcy of the highest order.

Please tighten up the rules and close the loophole.

Responsible adults clean up after themselves. They do NOT leave messes for others to deal with. That is the hallmark of spoiled children. Coal companies have behaved as spoiled children for far too long, raking in massive profits, leaving behind horrible tangled nightmares of pollution, expecting the taxpayers to foot the bill for cleaning up mine spoils and cleaning pools and massive dumps of coal ash while they kept the profits from despoiling natural areas. This MUST STOP. Hold the coal companies responsible for cleaning what they have spoiled.

To: The Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement
From: Barbara Wood

Taxpayers should not be on the hook for cleaning up coal companies' mess when they go bankrupt. Coal companies with a history of financial trouble must not be allowed to self-bond, plain and simple. We support changing Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act regulations to ensure that companies with a history of financial insolvency, and their subsidiary companies, are not allowed to self-bond coal mining operations.

For years, coal companies have been allowed just to promise the government they'll be able to pay for the clean-up when a coal mine closes ("self-bonding"), instead of actually setting aside the money required to do so. But when companies like Peabody go bankrupt, and then don't have the cash to clean up their mess, the law lets these companies shrug their shoulders, shirk their obligation, and walk away.

It seems like every other month another coal company goes bankrupt: in January it was Arch Coal; in April it was Peabody, the world's largest coal company. Closing this loophole is an urgently needed step that will immediately help communities and natural ecosystems around coal mines across the country.

It's time to protect the tax payers!

Mountain top removal is one of the most devastating ecological tragedies ever perpetrated on communities, and the earth's ecosystems. It has to end, and the damage, which can never be fully repaired, must be addressed in as responsible a way as technology allows. The people of this country and of the communities where these travesties have been perpetrated are not responsible for this damaging industrial technique. Corporations have profited, and they alone should responsibly deal with the mess they've created. They should deal until all the damage has been appropriately addressed and ecosystems and communities are restored.

No self-bonding by the coal industry is a reasonable and responsible request and will hopefully be changed to make coal companies responsible for the costs involved in their cleanup when they go bankrupt.

This makes it difficult for the coal companies, however, it is a necessary step for Climate Change, and the health of the planet and its inhabitants.

After filing for bankruptcy, Arch Coal had the audacity to invest in the proposed Millennium coal terminal in southwestern Washington State. This is how careless a coal company can be about first cleaning up their messes. I understand Arch has since withdrawn their investment in Millennium, but I'm appalled that they ever considered it once they were in bankruptcy. Coal companies have not been concerned about the quality of life for the residents of the areas in which they mined. I don't think they will now unless they are required to pay--required by a law that has teeth in it.

Growing up in Eastern Washington and N. Idaho I am all to familiar with what happens when a mining company goes bankrupt.

The horribly toxic mess created by the company in persute of profit at the expense of the locals and the environment. These leavings have been & are left behind when the company closes.

A mechanism needs to be put in place to clean up and restore.

Do what is right and make polluters accountable for every single drop of pollution they produce, not the innocents that already pay way too much at the pumps, in our taxes to defend oil on other countries' soil while the corporations take home millions in wages and bonuses, with loss of clean drinkable water, loss of habitat and wildlife, and climate change, just to name a few.

5786. Stanley Tomkiel (zip code: 08054-2702)

I was raised in the anthracite region of Northeastern Pennsylvania. I know how poorly regulated coal companies can permanently devastate a landscape and contaminate outflowing surface waters then simply vanish. In our case there was zero reclamation by the corporate entities which were formed to excavate and remove coal and immediately go out of business. Of course they immediately restarted as another corporate mining entity. Our coal companies were sleazy thieves that stole taxpayer owned resources and left taxpayers the task and massive expense of remediation. Please learn from my troubled childhood and the mess in Northeast Pennsylvania and demand full restoration bonding, with at least equal levels of refundable contingency funds.

Typical contingencies:

Two failed multi million dollar attempts, and counting, at plugging the McAdoo mine drainage tunnel so the Catawissa Creek can be restored to non-toxic pH.

Abandonment of Centralia to the mine fire which may burn for centuries.

Fifty foot subsidence of West Shenandoah when mining companies stripped the pillars as they left.

Please save our tax dollars and make the coal companies guarantee realistic reclamation bonds BEFORE mining begins.

(This is my compromise position because I would actually prefer to keep it in the ground. I have children who like the climate of their youth. Coal and CO2 are taking that climate away faster than most people can imagine.)

There is no reason these companies should be held harmless from cleaning up their toxic mess. Bankruptcy should not be a convenient way to stiff us, since many mines are subsidiaries and the parent company can step in. Because companies might declare bankruptcy when they aren't subsidiaries, the coal industry should be taxed additionally to create a fund to cover this eventuality by any coal company. I don't care whether the management staff cleans up after themselves, somebody other than innocent taxpayers should be responsible!

You know... it is really simple from where we sit. The coal industry has been very effective in making sure that all the legislation is geared to protect themselves at the expense of the taxpayers. Our fault that we didn't speak up sooner. But now, we are clear about the dance that has been going on. And it needs to come to an end.

Coal companies are polluting the environment (land, water, and air). And when they declare bankruptcy, all the obligation to clean up their waste is set to the side. And, we, the taxpayers, are picking up the bill.

This needs to stop.

Why should these greedy, irresponsible companies escape paying for the cleanup of their mess? It is questionable that they are really bankrupt after running the coal extraction meanwhile wrecking the earth, causing horrible damage and also damaging the miners who have to work in such conditions and they are now planning to walk away leaving wreckage behind. Make them pay!

A prime example of socializing the costs of doing business! It was their business practices that made the messes that threaten peoples lives and they should pay to fix it! Certain members of Congress think dis advantaged citizens should not be given aid for the very necessities of life, yet corporations are not only subsidized but get huge tax breaks just for being in business...while they underpay their workers and pollute their air, water and land...often making them sick...but then they say healthcare is not a right. If you can barely pay your rent and by food for your family, you can't afford heath insurance either. Stop protecting the profits of corporations making billions in profit and do what you're supposed to do...protect and help the living, breathing, working REAL citizens of this country!

IMO, companies that want to mine coal must put a $50 million escrow for cleanup after the coal mine is closed.

Taxpayers should not have to pay for this. It is socializing the losses after they privatized all the profits. That is just wrong!
